

Stefano Pagiola, Senior Environmental Economist, World Bank

Payments for environmental services and new mechanisms for financing forest conservation

Several new mechanisms for financing forest conservation have been developed in recent years, each with its own characteristics and area of application. None of these mechanisms on its own can resolve the problem of financing forest conservation in the DRC. The characteristics of each mechanism must be well understood in order to ensure that it is applied correctly.